To Whom It May Concern:

I'm pleased to recommend Mohammad Hasibur Rahman for future academic and professional pursuits. I had the opportunity to work closely with Mohammad this summer through the Tufts Venture Accelerator, where I served as a coach to his team as they developed and advanced an early-stage startup.

Mohammad stood out to me as an insightful, creative thinker with a genuine interest in what technology can make possible. He is technically capable and quick to learn, but what impressed me more was his ability to think beyond the technology itself, considering the customer, the larger opportunity, and where a product could go over time. He has the kind of future-oriented mindset that is particularly valuable in entrepreneurial and R&D environments.

Throughout the accelerator, Mohammad demonstrated a strong sense of ownership. As the team and product evolved, he was willing to step into ambiguity, help clarify priorities, and take responsibility for moving the work forward. He was thoughtful about incorporating feedback from teammates, potential customers, and design partners while still making decisions and maintaining momentum. He also showed an ability to break complex problems into manageable steps and adapt quickly when circumstances changed.

On a personal level, Mohammad was simply a pleasure to coach and to have in the program. He is curious, engaged, reliable, and brings a positive energy to the people around him. I came away from the summer seeing him as someone with both the technical foundation and entrepreneurial mindset to contribute meaningfully to ambitious teams working on difficult, emerging problems.

I'm happy to recommend Mohammad and am confident he will bring the same creativity, curiosity, and commitment to whatever he takes on next.

Sincerely,
